PowerPoint Presentation Prepared for the 2013 Fraser Region Training Event,
Surrey, British Columbia, February 28, 2013
Purpose

• Describe the foundations of capacity-building family-centered practices for supporting and strengthening parent and family competence and confidence

• Describe and illustrate the key characteristics of capacity-building family-centered practices

• Describe a method for promoting adoption of capacity-building family-centered practices

• Briefly describe the influences of capacity-building family-centered practices on parent, child, and family functioning

Value Statements for Working with Families and Their Children

Values are belief statements regarding how persons involved in education, human services, and other kinds of intervention programs ought to be treated by help giving professionals.

- Paul Dokecki (1983) was one of the first professionals to propose a value framework for developing policies and practices for strengthening families.

- Advocates at the Center on Human Policy (1986) at Syracuse University (USA) first articulated “A Statement in Support of Families and Their Children” that included family strengthening practices.

Translating Values into Family-Centered Practices

The process of translating value statements into family-centered practices is facilitated by “working through” the beliefs, assumptions, attitudes, and personal frames-of-mind of practitioners using benchmarks and standards for assessing the match between beliefs and practices.

Mapping the Adoption, Application and Adherence to Family Support Principles

by Carl J. Dunst

Abstract
It is often said that Family Resource Programs are unique, not only because of the services they provide, but also because of the principles that guide them. In this article, Carl Dunst tries to identify the hallmarks of an organization that has moved beyond paying lip service to its chosen principles. Dunst offers a number of good strategies for working with your staff and volunteers to develop a shared understanding of the values and ideas that make up your principles. He also emphasizes the importance of talking concretely about the way your principles “look” in practice, and suggests ways you can use your principles consciously in day-to-day activities like program planning and supervision of staff. Ultimately, truly principle-driven organization must be willing to let its efforts be judged by the families it serves. Dunst underscores the importance of seeking out honest and credible feedback and having the humility to listen to it when it comes.

Resumé
On dit souvent que les programmes de ressources pour la famille sont uniques, non seulement par les services qu’ils offrent, mais aussi par les principes qui les guident. Dans cet article, Carl Dunst s’attache à cerner les empreintes d’une organisation qui est allée au-delà de l’égarement stéréotypé des principes qu’elle a choisis. L’auteur propose des stratégies qui aideront à développer, auprès de votre personnel et vos bénévoles, une vision commune des valeurs et des idées qui composent vos principes. Il insiste sur l’importance de parler concretement de ce que — demeure — ces principes en pratique et suggère des moyens de les utiliser concrètement dans des activités courantes comme la planification de programmes et la supervision de personnel. Un organisateur véritablement guidé par ses principes doit être prêt à ce que ses efforts soient jugés par les familles qu’il dessert. L’auteur souligne la nécessité de rechercher des commentaires honnêtes et crédibles et d’avoir l’humilité de les écouter le moment venu.

This paper was prepared for the FRP Canada National Semiannual Conference "Emerging Trends in Family Support: From Policy to Practice," Mississauga, Ontario, October 2002. The paper is an extended version of a newsletter article appearing in Working Strategies, published by the Glothon & Statham's Strategies Program, Department of Social Services, Office of Child Abuse Prevention.

Family Support Principles

Family support principles are belief statements about how supports and resources ought to be made available to parents and other family members involved in early childhood intervention, parenting support, and family resource programs which specify how staff should interact with and treat families.
Family, Infant and Preschool Program Guiding Principles

- Families and family members are treated with dignity and respect at all times.
- Staff are sensitive, knowledgeable, and responsive to family, cultural, ethnic, and socio-economic diversity.
- Family choice and decision-making occur at all levels of participation in the program.
- Information necessary for families to make informed choices is shared in a sensitive, complete, and unbiased manner.
- Practices are based on family-identified desires, priorities, and preferences.
- Staff provide supports, resources, and services to families in a flexible, responsive, and individualized manner.
- A broad range of informal, community, and formal supports and resources are used for achieving family-identified outcomes.
- Staff build on child, parent and family strengths, assets, and interests as the primary way of strengthening family functioning.
- Staff-family relationships are characterized by partnerships and collaboration based on mutual trust, respect, and problem solving.
- Staff use help giving practices that support and strengthen family functioning.
Intervention Paradigms

Paradigms are worldviews or models for describing the key features and elements of how one thinks about, organizes, and uses the different features and elements of a model for conceptualizing and implementing intervention practices.

• The traditional paradigm in education, human services, health care, and other types of programs has been based on a deficit approach to intervention.

• An alternative paradigm more aligned with strengths-based values is a capacity-building approach for conceptualizing and implementing intervention practices.

Definition of Capacity-Building Family-Centered Practices

Capacity-building family-centered practices include methods and procedures used by practitioners to create participatory opportunities and experiences to strengthen existing and promote the development of new parenting and family abilities in a manner that enhances and strengthens individual and collective competence and self-efficacy beliefs.
Description of Family-Centered Practices

- Family-centered practices are a particular type of help giving style which builds cooperative relationships between parents, other family members, and practitioners that explicitly focuses on family capacity-building as the way in which supports and resources are provided or procured.

- Any type of intervention practice (early intervention, education, therapy, medicine, etc.) can be delivered in a family-centered manner.

- Family-centered practices are not a substitute for other types of interventions, but rather are how other types of interventions are delivered or used with families.
Family-Centered Practices

Research consistently has found that there are two clearly discernible subsets of family-centered practices that “fall into” distinct categories:

• Relational Practices
• Participatory Practices
Relational Family-Centered Practices

• Relational practices include behavior typically associated with effective help giving practices, including, but not limited to, compassion, active and reflective listening, empathy, and effective communication.

• Relational practices also include practitioner beliefs and attitudes about family and cultural strengths, values, and attitudes, and practitioner sensitivity to these beliefs and values as part of intervention practices.
Participatory Family-Centered Practices

• Participatory practices include behavior that actively involves family members in (a) informed choice and decision making, and (b) using existing strengths and abilities as well as developing new capabilities needed to obtain family-identified resources, supports, and services.

• Participatory practices also include practitioner responsiveness to and flexibility in how help is provided to children and their families.

  - Practitioner Beliefs and Attitudes

- Participatory Practices
  - Family Member Choice and Action
  - Practitioner Flexibility
Promoting Practitioner Adoption and Use of Family-Centered Practices

Family-centered checklists can be used as standards against which program or practitioner practices can be assessed as consistent with the intent of family-centered practices.

Promoting Understanding of the Key Characteristics of Family-Centered Practices

• Identify program-specific practices that are consistent with the intent of family-centered relational indicators

• Identify program-specific practices that are consistent with the intent of family-centered participatory indicators
Translating Relational Practice Indicators into Concrete Actions

• Treat a family with dignity and respect at all times

• Honor and respect a family’s personal and cultural beliefs and values

• Provide a family information in a complete and unbiased manner

• Recognize and honor individual family member strengths
Translating Participatory Practice Indicators into Concrete Actions

• Work in partnership with a family to identify family needs and to collaborate in obtaining needed resources

• Engage a family in making informed decisions about which resources and supports are best suited for meeting family-identified needs

• Provide family members participatory opportunities to obtain needed resources and supports

• Support and respect a family’s decisions even when they differ from a practitioner’s
Developing Program-Specific Capacity-Building Family-Centered Practices

• Review examples of family-centered principles and family-centered practice indicators to identify relevant practices
• Develop new practice indicators that “make sense” for a program’s mission and goals
• Obtain parent feedback and input on the practice indicators (Would you want to be treated in this way?)
• Obtain staff agreement about the importance of the practices
FRP Canada Guiding Principles of Family Support

1. Family support programs are open to all families, recognizing that all families deserve support.

2. Family support programs complement existing services, build networks and linkages, and advocate for policies, services and systems that support families’ abilities to raise healthy children.

3. Family support programs work in partnership with families and communities to meet expressed needs.

4. Family support programs focus on the promotion of wellness and use of a prevention approach to their work.

5. Family support programs work to increase opportunities and to strengthen individuals, families, and communities.

6. Family support programs operate from an ecological perspective that recognizes the interdependent nature of families’ lives.

7. Family support programs value and encourage mutual assistance and peer support.

8. Family support programs affirm parenting to be a life-long learning process.

9. Family support programs value the voluntary nature of participation in their services.

10. Family support programs promote relationships based on equality and respect for diversity.

11. Family support programs advocate nonviolence to ensure safety and security for all family members.

12. Family support programs continually seek to improve their practice by reflecting on what they do and how they do it.
Family-Centered Practice Indicators

Staff really listen to my concerns or requests
Staff see my child and family in a positive, healthy way
Staff provide me information I need to make good choices
Staff are responsive to my requests for advice or assistance
Staff try hard to understand my child and family’s situation
Staff recognize my child and family’s strengths
Staff help me be an active part of getting desired resources
Staff are flexible when my family’s situation changes
Staff encourage me to get what I want for myself
Staff are sensitive to my personal beliefs
Staff support me when I make a decision
Staff recognize the good things I do as a parent
Promoting Practitioner Understanding and Use of Family-Centered Practices

• Use of capacity-building training methods and evidence-based coaching practices to support and strengthen practitioner use of family-centered practices

• Can be accomplished using an evidence-based approach to adult learning called PALS
Participatory Adult Learning Strategy (PALS)

- PALS is an evidence-based adult learning practice that includes six key characteristics and associated practices.
- PALS has been used to promote practitioners’ use of many different kinds of intervention practices.
- PALS can be used to develop coaching and other supportive experiences to promote practitioners’ use of capacity-building family-centered practices.

What I Do (Coach)

• Describe the key characteristics of a particular family-centered practice or set of related practices
• Illustrate or demonstrate the use of the practice or set of practices

What You Do (Practitioner)

• Use the practice or set of practices as part of working with a family
• Assess and analyze what worked and why and what did not work and why

What We Both Do (Coach and Practitioner)

• Reflect on your understanding of the key characteristics of the practice or set of practices
• Self-assess your overall mastery of the practice or practices (e.g., performance checklist)
• Identify new participatory practices to promote deeper understanding of family-centered practices

What Can Be Learned from Monitoring Staff Use of Capacity-Building Family-Centered Practices?

• Identify how well staff are using family-centered practices

• Identify where coaching or supports are needed to strengthen staff use of family-centered practices

• Identify factors that are interfering with the use of family-centered practices

• Make changes to improve the use of family-centered practices
Measuring Adherence to Family-Centered Practices

• Adherence to family-centered practices is measured in terms of program participant judgments of the extent to which program staff interact with and treat participants and their families in ways consistent with the intent of family-centered practices.

• Assessing adherence is based on the assumption that only program participants are in a position to determine how they are treated.
Measuring Adherence to Family-Centered Practices

• In an adherence study or survey, program participants are asked to indicate on a 5-point scale ranging from never to all-the-time the extent to which staff treat or interact with the respondent and his or her family in the ways indicated.

• A typical survey includes 5 or 6 relational indicators and 5 or 6 participatory indicators.

Criterion for Measuring Adherence to Family-Centered Practices

Percentage of indicators receiving the highest rating on a 5-point scale indicating that a respondent and his or her family are always treated in a way consistent with the family-centered scale indicators.
Sources of Information for Measuring Adherence to Family-Centered Practices

- Eighteen (18) studies conducted between 1990 and 2004 at the Family, Infant and Preschool Program (Morganton, NC, USA)
- One thousand ninety-six (1,096) program participants
- Thirteen thousand five hundred eleven (13,511) indicators

Research Foundations of Family-Centered Practices

• There are now more than 100 studies that investigated the relationships between family-centered practices and child, parent, and family outcomes.

• Research that my colleagues and I have conducted has found that the relationships between family-centered practices and different outcomes are mediated by self-efficacy beliefs, including a sense of confidence and competence.
